

Examination of 120 GB Hard Drive

I am the Operations Manager and Forensic Consultant for Evolve Discovery in Portland, Oregon. Evolve Discovery is a company that specializes in Computer Forensics and Electronic Discovery production. I have 7 years experience in the computer forensic field, and have handled numerous cases ranging from simple data recovery to investigations concerning litigation in billion dollar lawsuits, involving both civil and criminal investigations. My training and certifications include the following: EnCase Certified Examiner (EnCE); EnCase Intermediate Analysis and Reporting; EnCase Advanced Analysis and Reporting; AccessData Forensic ToolKit BootCamp; AccessData Forensic ToolKit Windows Forensics; CompTIA A+ Computer Technician (CompTIA A+); Microsoft Certified Systems Engineer (MSCE); Microsoft Certified Systems Administrator (MCSA); and Sun Java Certified Programmer (SJP).

I was requested to perform a forensic analysis of the 120 GB hard drive that was used by Max [REDACTED] during his services for NorthWest Direct. As testified by Max [REDACTED], the drive was used by Mr. [REDACTED] until it "failed" on May 12, 2003. Max [REDACTED] reports that the hard drive was used as a secondary hard drive for a short period of time while he copied data from the hard drive to a new hard drive that he had purchased. After a period of time, Max [REDACTED] testifies that he removed the hard drive and stored it in a fireproof safe and at some time, formatted the drive. My analysis of the hard drive reveals that the hard drive was formatted on November 12, 2003, indicating that the failure that occurred on May 12, 2003 was most likely a software related incident, as a mechanical failure rarely allows further access to a hard drive without intrusive procedures undertaken at a specialty data recovery facility.

The analysis I was requested to perform concerned indications and conclusions that could be inferred related to the unallocated spaces on the hard drive, namely, usage indications during three time periods: before the failure on May 12, 2003, between May 12, 2003 and November 12, 2003 and after being reformatted on November 12, 2003.

As explanation of process and basis for my analysis, when a hard drive is initially or subsequently formatted for usage, the process creates tables and supporting files to allow storage of electronic data on the hard drive. For most Windows based computers since the year 2000, this is the NTFS file system. Obviously, this is not the electronic data, or files, that the user will put on the hard drive, but is only a means for the operating system to catalog, track and record the electronic data that will be placed on the hard drive for storage by the computer users. These tables occupy only a small percentage of the hard drive, typically 2-5%. As the reformatting event of November 12, 2003 did not overwrite the entire hard drive, about 95% of the hard drive is still available for analysis using forensic methodology and processes. The primary method of investigation would be to analyze the "Unallocated Space", the area of the hard drive that does not contain "Active Files", "Active Files" being files that NTFS is tracking.

As a result of the reformatting that occurred on November 12, 2003, the original NTFS file structure was not available. However, as the re-formatting did not overwrite the entire hard drive my analysis of the 120 GB hard drive indicates that there was extensive use of the hard drive prior to the reported failure on May 12, 2003. This is evidenced by the presence of thousands of dates occurring before May 12, 2003. While the absence of a file structure reduces the ability to associate a specific date and time to specific file fragments, the existence of the numerous dates does indicate that the computer was in use during this time. The dates and times that are present on the hard drive are indicative of a normal hard drive with the expected partial overwriting of deleted files during the normal operations of the Windows NTFS file system. These dates prior to May 12, 2003 are not limited to a few types of file fragments but are present in all types of file fragments present on the hard drive.

On Page 1 of Exhibit 1, a sample of an error report recovered from the Unallocated Space is displayed. This is an error report created by the operating system and in all likelihood a computer user would not even know that it had been created. The types of information that can be seen in this report, include the date and time of the error report's creation, the operating system and the type of video card.

On Page 2 of Exhibit 1, a file fragment from an email chain is displayed with sufficient body present to ascertain the purpose of the email. Included with the email fragment are dates and times.

Exhibit 1 shows that though the original data no longer has a formal file structure, sufficient remnants remain to indicate hard drive usage based on data recorded on the hard drive. An additional automated process was used to assist in the recovery of the files contained in the Unallocated Spaces. This process systematically searches for and marks files that are contained in the Unallocated Spaces and attempts to make those files available for recovery. In many cases, the files are recoverable but not all files found can be fully recovered. Due to the lack of a formal NTFS file structure, the process is forced to make assumptions about files that are fragmented to different areas of the hard drive, and these assumptions, while useful to show prior existence of files, cannot fully recover those files to their original condition.

While the hard drive usage prior to the May 12, 2003 failure event appears to be normal and expected for a computer in a business environment, some unusual indications did exist and are displayed in Exhibit 2. The various .htm files are an indication that the computer was used to access the eBay site. The presence of the .lnk files, or link files, indicates that the presence of the files was known and the files were accessed. This is borne out by the fact that link files for user generated files are not created until the files are actually accessed by a user.

An analysis of the hard drive was conducted for usage between the dates of May 12, 2003 and November 12, 2003, the time that Max ██████ testifies that the hard drive was in storage after he copied data to the new hard drive. Exhibit 3 is included to indicate the hard drive usage during this time frame.

From the recovered files present on the hard drive that were created or accessed during this time frame, it is apparent that the hard drive was being actively used, mainly for storage of downloaded video files. This assertion is based on the Windows file system operation and the characteristics of the File Created date and time.

The File Created date and time is recorded when the file is created on the local computer, not when the file was originally made by the user who initially created the files. As is seen in Exhibit 3, the time span across multiple months regarding the File Created date and time indicates that the hard drive was being actively used during the time that Max [REDACTED] testifies the hard drive was in storage.

Regarding the structure and format of the video files in Exhibit 3, these video files are in a format that is typically exhibited in file sharing environments. To enhance the efficiency and reliability for all users participating in the file sharing, large files are segmented into multiple small files for sharing. Embedded error correcting and accessing multiple computers to download multiple segments at that same time are a trademark of file sharing. Once all segments of a video are downloaded to the local computer, those individual parts can be recombined into a copy of the whole file that constitutes the entire video which can then be viewed on the computer.

In addition to file sharing mainly being used to distribute material in violation of US and International copy write laws, use of file sharing software, by default, circumvents the security of the computer and opens pathways to the local computer that can be exploited by other computer users.

An analysis of the hard drive was conducted to determine hard drive usage on or after the re-formatting event that occurred on November 12, 2003. A search for files or file fragments associated with dates on or after November 12, 2003 did not reveal any dates other than those associated with the reformatting that occurred on November 12, 2003. These files are the files that are associated with the operating system creating the NTFS file structure necessary for the storage of electronic data on the hard drive. After this time, there was no subsequent access to the hard drive, indicating that the hard drive was not put into use or accessed after being reformatted.

It is my conclusion that the 120 GB hard drive was in normal usage prior to May 12, 2003. Some exceptions to normal business usage are displayed in Exhibit 2. Between May 12, 2003 and November 12, 2003, the hard drive was being used mainly as a storage medium for video files. This usage is documented in Exhibit 3. Following the November 12, 2003 re-formatting of the hard drive, the hard drive was not used or accessed and no subsequent dates or recovered files are present on the hard drive.

I HEREBY DECLARE THAT THE ABOVE STATEMENTS ARE TRUE TO THE BEST OF MY KNOWLEDGE AND BELIEF, AND THAT I UNDERSTAND THEY ARE MADE FOR USE AS EVIDENCE IN COURT AND ARE SUBJECT TO PENALTY FOR PERJURY.

Dated May 23, 2010
